Product liability in the USA is a mystery for many market participants. Frivolous law suits and class actions bear large risks for companies active in the USA. Product liability is described as "hell" or "graveyard" by some while others find it a manageable problem that is part of cost-of-doing-business in the world's largest market. An expert panel will discuss what US product liability is all about. The experts will discuss how to proactively manage the inherent risks through advance planning and insurance. And they will give an overview on the necessary actions if and when a product liability claim arises. The evening will start with short introductory remarks by each expert, followed by a moderated discussion among the panellists.

Ample time will be given for questions from and discussion with the participants. After the panel discussion, a cocktail riche will allow for valuable interaction with the panellists and with the other participants.

This evening is designed for general managers with US operations, as well as legal counsels and insurance specialists covering activities in the USA. Participants will come out of the evening with a clearer view of the risks and mitigation possibilities, with a more fact-based appreciation of the inherent risks and some concrete ideas to be implemented the next days and weeks.
